Knife Humor

-Agony Aunt and The Puma Knife-

The Mother keeps expropriating my Puma carry knife.

Every time I turn around its gone again. I haven't said anything to her I just quietly take it back when she is not around, then I hide it from her. But you can't hide anything from her, its like she's a mind reader or something. Every time I wake up its gone again. And because of my broken leg its hard to put it out of range of her. No she didn't break my leg it was a motorcycle accident. So I'm stuck, I don't want to get into a fight with her cause she will just wipe the floor with me, especially as I can't even stand up at the moment.

I wonder if any of the knife mags have an agony aunt that I can write to, to get advise and counseling for my problem. Or maybe I should see a counselor altogether, after all my inability to confront my Mother on such a fundamental issue raises all kinds of questions regarding the health of our relationship. And just because I'm 50 and she is 85 does not mean that there are not elements of child abuse here. I have thought of calling "Childline" the telephone help line but I'm afraid they might not take me seriously.

All this is not to mention her flagrant disregard for the unwritten rules of knife etiquette.

1. Thou shalt not steal thy son's carry knife.
2. Thou shalt not immerse thy son's carry knife in water without drying it off immediately afterwards.
3. Thou shalt not damage thy son's carry knife's edge by using it on a hard surface such as a plate as if it were a steak knife.

I have tried to bring these issues to my mother's attention but all to no avail.

And of course every time I need my knife its gone again. And until my leg heals, myself and my knife are subject to her less than tender mercies. I am at my wits end....
